The gloves are off and the fight for the White House is in full swing. The latest polling numbers from John Zogby, taken at the close of the Republican National Convention, show President Bush gaining momentum. In fact, Bush is enjoying a double-digit lead over Kerry among the self-identified investor class votes. John Zogby joins Karen Gibbs with the meat and potatoes of his latest poll. Then, well as John Zogby says, the voters consistently say that as far as they're concerned, it's not about Iraq, it's about jobs and the economy. But with the U.S. still a million jobs short of where it was when President Bush took office, did he offer a compelling defense of his record in his acceptance speech? On the other hand, with jobs increasing and unemployment now at its lowest level in three years, can John Kerry still play this issue to his advantage? Geoff Colvin talks with Mickey Kantor and Todd Bucholz to discuss these issues. Finally, Karen Gibbs is joined by Michael Farr for an investor perspective.

Massive budget deficits, continuing mayhem in Iraq, and a very close presidential race are just a few of the storm clouds billowing over our nation. What's the best way to prepare for the possibility of an economic tempest? Where are the shelters? What is the survival strategy? Two top investors with differing perspectives on the world offer emergency plans for investment success. We'll get the long and the short of it from famed Hedge Fund Manager Jim Chanos, who was among the first to discover the games Enron played, and John Rutledge, who predicts calm after the storm. Then, we're all living longer, spending more time in retirement, but the big question is: How will we pay for that longevity? Prevailing wisdom says stock up on bonds for the golden years, but does that adage have any teeth? Investor and author Phil Dow is skeptical. His unique investment strategy says buy the bulldogs--great companies, tenacious industry leaders that will deliver solid results for the long haul. These bulldogs just might guide you to that pot of gold.

Many Wall Street junkies give Robert Rubin credit for having engineered the hottest economy in recent memory. During his tenure as Treasury secretary, America created a record number of "Millionaires Next Door." At this critical juncture in our nation's history, we address the most pressing issues of the day with Rubin--one of the most respected and esteemed men ever to toil on Wall Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, and an undisputed "maven" in the worlds of finance, economics, and politics. Then, the frenzy in home building, new purchases and trade-ups continues, but will it last? Across the nation homeowners are profiteering from an unprecedented surge in home values--in some areas prices have sky-rocketed by as much as 50 percent. Is your home a foolproof investment, or, a huff and a puff away from collapsing? Parallels to the tech bubble are unmistakable, according to Fortune's perceptive senior writer Shawn Tully. But Coldwell Banker's Jim Gillespie sees this red-hot housing market boom continuing despite storm clouds on the horizon.

FRONTLINE offers two starkly contrasting images: one of empty storefronts in Circleville, Ohio, where the local TV manufacturing plant has closed down; the other, a sea of high rises in the South China boomtown of Shenzhen. The connection between American job losses and soaring Chinese exports? Wal-Mart. For Wal-Mart, China has become the cheapest, most reliable production platform in the world, the source of up to $25 billion in annual imports that help the company deliver everyday low prices to 100 million customers a week. But while some economists credit Wal-Mart's single-minded focus on low costs with helping contain U.S. inflation, others charge that the company is the main force driving the massive overseas shift to China in the production of American consumer goods, resulting in hundreds of thousands of lost jobs and a lower standard of living here at home.

A leading spiritual voice, Sister Joan Chittister is calling on the media to responsibly and accurately report on the social, economic and political injustices plaguing our society. Bill Moyers talks with Sister Joan about how religion has been so strong a dividing line in American politics. Just back from Afghanistan, war journalist Christian Parenti provides a close up view of the realities on the ground and the disturbing balance between powerful warlords and the US-backed Karzai government and an economy dependent on the poppy trade. In the wake of a hard-fought election with a divided nation looking toward the next four years, campaign proposals about deficits, taxes, and Social Security are on the table. But what do the President's economic plans really outline for Americans? David Brancaccio talks to Larry Kotlikoff, an economist who's developed a highly-regarded method of calculating the fiscal burden we're leaving our children.

As New York's chief law enforcement officer, Eliot Spitzer has taken on the titans of Wall Street to get a fair deal for Main Street. His far-reaching investigations have uncovered fraudulent practices in some of the nation's biggest companies and helped restore transparency and honesty to industries that provide important products and services to regular Americans-mutual funds, prescription drugs, insurance. David Brancaccio goes inside the mind, motivations and investigations of one of the nation's most feared and respected attorneys general, the man they call "the sheriff of Wall Street." Richard Dawkins is one of the most controversial thinkers in the world today. His book THE SELFISH GENE describes in stunning detail a world where the mission for all life is nothing more than to replicate itself. Just as the long-simmering battle over how evolution is taught in America's schools is heating up again, Dawkins' most recent book, THE ANCESTOR'S TALE, sheds light on the most compelling aspects of evolutionary history and theory. Bill Moyers gets perspective from Dawkins, a prominent zoologist, on critical thinking and on the backlash against the very notion of evolution. "Among things that science does know, evolution is about as certain as anything," he says. "Andàis accepted by responsible educated churchmen, as well as scientists."

What's wrong with Wal-Mart? It's still the world's biggest company -- at this time of year it may take in $1 billion a day, which is more than the entire nation of Sweden produces. But suddenly the Beast of Bentonville is looking vulnerable. Sales growth last month was pathetic. Goldman Sachs has downgraded the stock. And now across America people are asking whether this is a bump in the road, or is the whole business, social, and cultural phenomenon of Wal-Mart cooling down? Marshall Cohen is retailing's trendmeister, senior analyst at NPD Group. Watts Wacker is a futurist and author of The 500 Year Delta. When a certain popular bakery company opens a new store, voracious fans often camp out overnight just to be first in line to get one of these gooey, hot, glazed treats. The company sells so many donuts in just a week that if you lined them up, the sugary trail would stretch all the way from New York to Los Angeles! And within two years after going public, Krispy Kreme's stock more than tripled. But now? The company's boss is at the top of Herb Greenberg's list for the worst CEO of the year. Herb is a Wall $treet Week with FORTUNE contributor and CBS Marketwatch columnist and he joins us with his picks for the best and worst CEO's.

Uplifting News about Holiday Makeovers: An improved economy combined with consumer passion for spending on luxury gifts made cosmetic surgery the surprise "it" gift of this holiday season. This year's final numbers are predicted to far surpass last years. Nationwide, doctors performed 8.3 million procedures in 2003, up 20 percent from the previous year, according to the American Society for Aesthetic Plastic Surgery. The most common procedures were liposuction, breast augmentations, eyelid jobs, rhinoplasties and breast reductions, according to the trade group. The most common non-surgical procedures were Botox injections and laser hair removal. What does all this nipping and tucking mean to Wall Street? W$WwFORTUNE revisits the industry that is literally making over America. And no where is this trend more pronounced than in the workplace! Somewhere Over the Rainbow.... 2005 Market Outlook: Famed market researcher Steve Leuthold was one of the markets biggest bulls in 2004. The gloves are off and the fight for the White House is in full swing. The latest polling numbers from John Zogby, taken at the close of the Republican National Convention, show President Bush gaining momentum. In fact, Bush is enjoying a double-digit lead over Kerry among the self-identified investor class votes. John Zogby joins Karen Gibbs with the meat and potatoes of his latest poll. Then, well as John Zogby says, the voters consistently say that as far as they're concerned, it's not about Iraq, it's about jobs and the economy. But with the U.S. still a million jobs short of where it was when President Bush took office, did he offer a compelling defense of his record in his acceptance speech? On the other hand, with jobs increasing and unemployment now at its lowest level in three years, can John Kerry still play this issue to his advantage? Geoff Colvin talks with Mickey Kantor and Todd Bucholz to discuss these issues. Finally, Karen Gibbs is joined by Michael Farr for an investor perspective.

Interweaving biography and social history, Typhoid Mary tells the extraordinary story of Mary Mallon, once called the most dangerous woman in America. She gained this notoriety by being the first person in North America to be identified as a healthy carrier of typhoid fever. Despite her indignant protests of innocence, she was incarcerated for years on an island in the East River. Mary Mallon's saga throws into vivid relief the emerging science of public health and the social, ethical, and legal dilemmas it posed to its pioneers at the turn of the twentieth century.

Many investors are sitting on the sidelines and most money managers are hoarding cash. But Bob Olstein, veteran manager of the Olstein Financial Alert Fund, is fully invested for the first time in nearly a decade. Karen Gibbs speaks to him about his investing strategies. Then, A blockbuster drug became history last week when Merck, the giant pharmaceutical company, withdrew Vioxx from the market, saying the arthritis pain medicine can increase the risk of heart attacks in long-term users. Now the stock has cratered, and millions of investors have to decide whether Merck--one of the most widely held stocks in America--is still worth owning, or whether it has fallen so far that it's actually worth buying. Wall Street Week with FORTUNE contributor Michael Farr gives some answers to Geoff Colvin. Finally, Geoff looks at a new technology, called RFID, tech jargon for radio ID tags, that is about to change our lives and the way every company does business.

Lucky Severson examines the controversial debate over legalizing marijuana for medical purposes. California is one of nine states where marijuana has been legalized for medical use. In 2002 a court decision ruled that doctors could not be punished for recommending medical marijuana, the number of patients using pot has grown by the thousands, and numerous medical marijuana clubs have opened throughout the state. Additionally, an increasing number of churches have given their blessing to medical marijuana use - among them, the Episcopal Church, the National Baptist Convention, the Presbyterian Church and the United Methodists. Other religious groups, however, like the Southern Baptist Convention, charge that the use of marijuana for pain treatment is just an excuse for recreational drug use. Kim Lawton provides an update on the 2004 fall annual meeting of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops. During the Monday session, Bishop William S. Skylstad of Spokane, who is considered a liberal within the Church because of his views on poverty, the death penalty, war and abortion, was elected the new president of the USCCB. Judy Valente talks with moderate Christians about what can be done to improve dialogue between all faiths in the aftermath of the election. Since the 2004 election, church members of various mainline denominations are concerned that fault lines are developing among American Christians over such issues as the separation of church and state and a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage. The question facing many "moderate" Christians is whether this divide will grow wider, or if there's a way to find common ground.

As medications play an ever-increasing role in modern health care, the importance to consumers of FDA approval, it would seem, has never been greater. For many consumers, the phrase "FDA-approved" signifies that a drug or product is completely safe and without risk. But just how much does the average American know about the FDA approval process and what it can--and cannot--do? How good is the FDA's system for identifying drugs that don't work or cause harm? And what happens when a harmful product makes its way into consumers' hands? FRONTLINE investigates the FDA and drug safety. Featuring real-life cases of FDA-approved drugs that were taken off the market after injuring--and in some cases, killing--consumers, the one-hour documentary examines the role drug companies play in the approval and monitoring of prescription drugs, and questions whether the FDA's current system is adequate for protecting the public safety.

The past few years has seen an explosion in the popularity-and profitability-of complementary and alternative medicine (CAM). Under pressure from everyone from consumers to Congress-and tempted by huge grants-major hospitals and medical schools have embraced therapies that they once dismissed as quackery. So accepted, in fact, have alternative medical treatments become that an entire center of the National Institutes of Health is now devoted to CAM. But the question remains: Do these treatments actually work? In "The Alternative Fix," FRONTLINE examines the controversy over complementary and alternative medical treatments. Through interviews with staunch supporters, skeptical scientists, and observers on both sides of the debate, the one-hour documentary examines how these popular treatments are facing increased scrutiny as the first real studies of their effectiveness are published, and questions whether hospitals that offer alternative therapies are conveying a sense of legitimacy on these largely untested and scientifically unproven treatments.

Challenges Abroad: Despite the controlled presentation at the Republican National Convention, developments in Sudan, Russia and Israel this week serve as a reminder that the presidential election cannot escape the influence of outside events. Margaret Warner discusses the impact of international events on the U.S. political process with Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., chairman of the Senate Select Intelligence Committee, and Democratic senator Chris Dodd of Connecticut, who sits on the Foreign Relations Committee. The Running Mate: Vice president Dick Cheney tonight will be honored and renominated and then will address the delegates at the Republican National Convention. Kwame Holman reports on Cheney's tenure and influence as vice president. Historical Perspectives Gwen Ifill discusses how events outside the candidates' control can affect the fall election with presidential historian Michael Beschloss; Richard Norton Smith, executive director of the Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library and Museum; and Meena Bose, professor of American politics at the U.S. Military Academy in West Point, New York.

Update: Crisis in Sudan: Secretary of state Colin Powell used the term genocide for the first time today to describe the murder of tens of thousands of African Sudanese in the Darfur region of western Sudan. Correspondent Terence Smith looks at the evolving U.S. response to the humanitarian and refugee crisis in Sudan and Chad. On the Stump: President Bush promoted his economic agenda at a rally in Colmar, Pennsylvania, today. Democratic presidential nominee Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) spoke about healthcare reform at a rally in Des Moines, Iowa. Correspondent Kwame Holman reports. Ending the Ban?: The federal assault-weapons ban, which outlaws 19 types of semi-automatic weapons, is set to expire on Monday if Congress does not renew it. Senior correspondent Margaret Warner gets two perspectives on whether Congress should renew the ban from Sen. Diane Feinstein (D-Calif.), an original supporter of the 1994 assault-weapons ban, and Sen. Larry Craig (R-Idaho), a board member of the National Rifle Association. Disclosing Data: A group of prestigious medical journals announced yesterday that they will not report the results of any clinical trial that is not registered in a public database from its beginning. Health correspondent Susan Dentzer explains the growing controversy over the disclosure of clinical-trial results. Senior correspondent Ray Suarez gets two differing views in the debate over disclosure from Alan Goldhammer of the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturer's Association of America and Kay Dickersin, director of the U.S. Cochrane Center and a professor of community health at Brown Medical School.

Republican speakers have made a case for war in many of this week's speeches. But, few people could give us better insight into the war in Iraq than journalist Phillip Robertson, who has been on the frontlines since April. Just a couple of weeks ago, Robertson was one of the first Western journalists to make it into Najaf during heavy fighting between the insurgent forces of Moktada al-Sadr and the U.S. Bill Moyers interviews Robertson via satellite to get the view from Baghdad and find out what he's been experiencing on the ground.

In the wake of the 9/11 Commission Report, a critical question continues to haunt America's national psyche: how could the most powerful nation on earth have been so utterly unprepared to protect its homeland? In "9/11: For the Record," a special one-hour analysis of the commission report, NOW with Bill Moyers connects the dots of what happened that day and the warning signs leading up to it. On the eve of the third anniversary of 9/11, Bill Moyers once again teams up with a long-time colleague, the award-winning producer Sherry Jones, to take a second look at what the 9/11 Commission found. Jones, whose credits include "Watergate Plus 30: Shadow of History," "Trade Secrets," and "High Crimes and Misdemeanors," highlights the agonizing close calls, missteps, and outright failures of two successive administrations and America's intelligence and security agencies in the months and years leading up to 9/11.

Whatever happened to small government? The Republican presidential nominee, George W. Bush, has grown government spending dramatically in his first term. Newt Gingrich brought Republicans to power 10 years ago by promising a much smaller government in his "Contract with America." Ten years later, at the Republican National Convention, Gingrich was almost entirely out of sight. And that's exactly the reason Tucker begins his convention coverage with the former speaker of the house. The Republicans put on an impressive television spectacle in the heart of Manhattan. Carlson discusses the glitz and the production with Richard Cohen of The Washington Post and Deroy Murdoch of the Scripps Howard News Service, both long-time New Yorkers. The segment was taped, naturally, in the heart of Manhattan's theatre district, at Sardi's restaurant, just steps away from Times Square. One of America's foremost observers of the intersection of culture and politics is New York Times columnist Frank Rich. Carlson met with him to discuss this intersection and other topics.

The latest polling numbers from John Zogby, taken at the close of the Republican National Convention, show President Bush gaining momentum. In fact, Bush is enjoying a double-digit lead over Kerry among the self-identified investor class votes. John Zogby joins Karen Gibbs with the meat and potatoes of his latest poll. Then, well as John Zogby says, the voters consistently say that as far as they're concerned, it's not about Iraq, it's about jobs and the economy. But with the U.S. still a million jobs short of where it was when President Bush took office, did he offer a compelling defense of his record in his acceptance speech? On the other hand, with jobs increasing and unemployment now at its lowest level in three years, can John Kerry still play this issue to his advantage? Geoff Colvin talks with Mickey Kantor and Todd Bucholz to discuss these issues. Finally, Karen Gibbs is joined by Michael Farr for an investor perspective.

Presidential debates can change the course of elections, but George Farah, a remarkable young author and executive director of Open Debates, has evidence showing that the debates' rules of order have been hijacked by the two main political parties. The result? Moderators can't ask follow-up questions, important issues are never raised, and credible third-party candidates are excluded from the proceedings altogether. NOW with Bill Moyers details the secretive process by which the party handlers ensure there won't be a substantive discussion of the issues at what are, for many voters, the most important events of the campaign.

What issues are the American people not hearing about from George Bush and John Kerry? On the evening of the second presidential debate in St. Louis, NOW with Bill Moyers' David Brancaccio engages the four major third-party candidates in spirited conversations about the topics they believe should be part of the national dialogue. On Friday, October 8, 2004 on PBS (check local listings), Brancaccio gets the perspectives of the candidates that were excluded from the debates: Reform Party presidential nominee Ralph Nader and Green Party candidate David Cobb and between Constitution Party candidate Michael Peroutka and Libertarian Party candidate Michael Badnarik.

How will unmarried women vote, from high-paid professionals to single mothers struggling to make ends meet? The debates are over. Or were those press conferences cleverly arranged by the two candidates to make sure spontaneity never intruded on memorized sound bites? These days, as President Bush and Senator Kerry head to stump in the battleground states, they often take a Detour...through daytime television. This is Kevin Phillips's tenth presidential election since he helped Richard Nixon wrestle victory from a hard-fought down-to-the wire race in 1968, an election decided by just 800-thousand votes. This week it was that enormous payoff to big corporations by their subjects in Congress.

North Korea's enigmatic dictator, Kim Jong Il, has been getting plenty of attention recently. In the first presidential debate, Democratic candidate John Kerry accused the Bush administration of allowing North Korea to obtain nuclear weapons on their watch. The forthcoming film "Team America: World Police," has Kim Jong Il in the lead bad-guy role. Tucker interviews former CIA psychological profiler Jerrold Post about the Kim Jong Il personality cult. Post spent several decades developing personality profiles for the Central Intelligence Agency. Then, Carlson is joined by Deroy Murdock of Scripps Howard News Service and Hilary Rosen of CNBC in a discussion of the latest in campaign developments, as well as further analysis of the situation vis-a-vis North Korea. Finally, on the eve of the election in Afghanistan, Carlson talks with Pamela Constable of The Washington Post. As The Post's chief correspondent in Afghanistan and South Asia, Constable is a western woman reporting from some of the most socially conservative and dangerous locales.

Suicide Missions, Baseball, & Political Satire: A group of American reservists refuse to go on what they perceived to be a suicide mission in Iraq. Dereliction of duty, or honorable dissent? The war in Iraq is the top issue in the presidential campaign and both sides have deployed retired generals to make their case. Polls show that military voters overwhelmingly support President Bush. Whatever happened to the apolitical soldier? Tucker interviews James Webb, author, Vietnam veteran and former secretary of the navy. If there's a team that's been more unlucky than the Boston Red Sox, it is the Chicago Cubs. And NPR's Scott Simon has been among the Cubs's most loyal, if long suffering, fans. Who better, then, to explain to the decidedly sports-challenged Tucker why baseball isn't only the American pastime, but the closest the country has to a state religion. Political satire comes in many forms, but among the best is Harry Shearer, whose voice millions of Americans have heard on The Simpsons. Who would Montgomery Burns vote for? Is Springfield in a blue or red state? Shearer joins Tucker to discuss politics, satire, and Dick Cheney's fist.

With the presidential debates wrapped up and fewer than three weeks to go before Election Day, the candidates and their campaigns are scrambling to wring every possible vote out of the coveted undecided citizens in the battleground states. John Harris of The Washington Post watched the most recent debate with a group of uncommitted voters; he'll be at the WASHINGTON WEEK roundtable to report their reactions. Karen Tumulty of TIME magazine has been following the campaigns and allied groups as they clamber for voter support; she'll describe the unprecedented efforts underway this year. And in the latest installment in WASHINGTON WEEK'S ongoing campaign-issues series, Barbara Bradley Hagerty of National Public Radio will describe the role of religion in politics this year: how the candidates talk about their faiths and whether it matters to voters.

In many U.S. localities, election day isn't soon, it is now; in places like Texas and Florida, voting is already underway. With a proliferation of early voting, expanded absentee voting, provisional-ballot systems, and ambitious new-voter registration drives, the 2004 balloting could be the most complicated ever. You can bet that the parties, the candidates, and the state election officials are bracing for a storm. John Harwood of The Wall Street Journal will describe the latest developments. At their nominating conventions, both President Bush and Senator Kerry showed optimism and high spirits. In recent weeks, though, both the incumbent and the challenger have been just as interested in turning Americans' fears -- fears of terrorism, fears of economic insecurity -- into votes. What's behind this tactic? Michael Duffy of TIME magazine sizes things up..

Only days remain until voters go to the polls in full force, and still the race is tight. No one is coasting to Election Day; both the president and the challenger are hard at work trying to "close the deal." The WASHINGTON WEEK panel takes a look at the campaigns' strategies to get the job done. Dan Balz of The Washington Post analyzes the final push to win over voters with a compelling message. Doyle McManus of the Los Angeles Times puts the campaign into context and takes a look at how the candidates are responding to all the latest breaking news stories in these final days. Jeanne Cummings of The Wall Street Journal sizes up the strategies to head off any voting irregularities and make every vote a valid vote.

A leading spiritual voice, Sister Joan Chittister is calling on the media to responsibly and accurately report on the social, economic and political injustices plaguing our society. Bill Moyers talks with Sister Joan about how religion has been so strong a dividing line in American politics. Just back from Afghanistan, war journalist Christian Parenti provides a close up view of the realities on the ground and the disturbing balance between powerful warlords and the US-backed Karzai government and an economy dependent on the poppy trade. In the wake of a hard-fought election with a divided nation looking toward the next four years, campaign proposals about deficits, taxes, and Social Security are on the table. But what do the president's economic plans really outline for Americans? David Brancaccio talks to Larry Kotlikoff, an economist who's developed a highly-regarded method of calculating the fiscal burden we're leaving our children.

CREDIBILITY GAP: President Bush tapped Condoleezza Rice to replace Colin Powell as Secretary of State. Her performance as national security advisor has raised questions about her credibility and competence. Critics point to her mismanagement of crucial intelligence leading up to 9/11 and say she misled the American people about the reasons for going to war in Iraq. NOW takes a hard look at the track record of Condoleezza Rice as she prepares to become America's top diplomat. DOUBLE DEALING: Michele Mitchell takes viewers inside a story of greed that has shocked even the most hardened Washington insiders and follows the trail of lobbyists who allegedly bilked several of the nation's Indian tribes out of tens of millions. She travels to the Tigua Indian Reservation in El Paso, Texas, where gaming revenues pulled a people out of poverty and brought them a better way of life. ANGELA GLOVER BLACKWELL AND

MANUEL PASTOR: David Brancaccio talks to experts on social justice Angela Glover Blackwell and Manuel Pastor who say that America needs to seize on the momentum for change coming out of the election and focus it on lifting up the communities that need help the most. Blackwell runs a national organization called PolicyLink that advocates economic and social equity, and Pastor is a professor of Latin American and Latino studies and director of the Center for Justice, Tolerance, and Community at the University of California at Santa Cruz. Lucky Severson examines the controversial debate over legalizing marijuana for medical purposes. California is one of nine states where marijuana has been legalized for medical use. In 2002 a court decision ruled that doctors could not be punished for recommending medical marijuana, the number of patients using pot has grown by the thousands, and numerous medical marijuana clubs have opened throughout the state. Additionally, an increasing number of churches have given their blessing to medical marijuana use - among them, the Episcopal Church, the National Baptist Convention, the Presbyterian Church and the United Methodists. Other religious groups, however, like the Southern Baptist Convention, charge that the use of marijuana for pain treatment is just an excuse for recreational drug use. Kim Lawton provides an update on the 2004 fall annual meeting of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops. During the Monday session, Bishop William S. Skylstad of Spokane, who is considered a liberal within the Church because of his views on poverty, the death penalty, war and abortion, was elected the new president of the USCCB. Judy Valente talks with moderate Christians about what can be done to improve dialogue between all faiths in the aftermath of the election. Since the 2004 election, church members of various mainline denominations are concerned that fault lines are developing among American Christians over such issues as the separation of church and state and a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage. The question facing many "moderate" Christians is whether this divide will grow wider, or if there's a way to find common ground.

First Up: The Democrats are meeting at the Clinton Library in Little Rock this weekend, reminiscing about the "good old days" and re-assessing their electoral strategies for the future. But as the Democrats seek to do better in "red" America, are they also neglecting their core African-American constituency? And why do African Americans continue to vote in overwhelming numbers for a party that doesn't share many of their moral and cultural values? Carlson talks with Marjorie Harris, a candidate for the Democratic National Committee's vice-chairmanship, about the African-American vote, the Democrats and the 2004 re-alignment. Conversation: Mark Bowden, the author of Black Hawk Down and correspondent for The Atlantic, talks with Carlson about the media, war, and the incident in Fallujah in which a Marine is alleged to have killed an unarmed, injured combatant. Back Page: Seth Mnookin takes us inside the biggest journalistic scam in American history: Jayson Blair and The New York Times. The story encompasses race relations, detective work and outsized egos, and Mnookin shares new details about the scandal and its aftermath. Mnookin's new book is Hard News: The Scandals at The New York Times and Their Meaning for American Media.

As medications play an ever-increasing role in modern health care, the importance to consumers of FDA approval, it would seem, has never been greater. For many consumers, the phrase "FDA-approved" signifies that a drug or product is completely safe and without risk. But just how much does the average American know about the FDA approval process and what it can--and cannot--do? How good is the FDA's system for identifying drugs that don't work or cause harm? And what happens when a harmful product makes its way into consumers' hands? FRONTLINE investigates the FDA and drug safety. Featuring real-life cases of FDA-approved drugs that were taken off the market after injuring--and in some cases, killing--consumers, the one-hour documentary examines the role drug companies play in the approval and monitoring of prescription drugs, and questions whether the FDA's current system is adequate for protecting the public safety.

Taxes, health care, the Kerik controversy, and good old-fashioned politics, Iraqi-style. We take a look at the president's economic summit. Also on the domestic front, the Department of Health Human services may have a new leader, former environment chief and Utah governor Mike Leavitt. What does this tell us about the president's health care priorities? This week's Washington tale, how did Bernard Kerik's murky history escape the notice of the White House? And democracy takes its first halting steps in Iraq, with an election campaign, trials on the way, and a lawyer for Saddam. Covering these stories this week, Alan Murray of "The Wall Street Journal," Ceci Connolly of "The Washington Post," Michael Duffy of "Time" magazine, and Barbara Slavin of "USA Today."

FRONTLINE offers two starkly contrasting images: one of empty storefronts in Circleville, Ohio, where the local TV manufacturing plant has closed down; the other, a sea of high rises in the South China boomtown of Shenzhen. The connection between American job losses and soaring Chinese exports? Wal-Mart. For Wal-Mart, China has become the cheapest, most reliable production platform in the world, the source of up to $25 billion in annual imports that help the company deliver everyday low prices to 100 million customers a week. But while some economists credit Wal-Mart's single-minded focus on low costs with helping contain U.S. inflation, others charge that the company is the main force driving the massive overseas shift to China in the production of American consumer goods, resulting in hundreds of thousands of lost jobs and a lower standard of living here at home.

As New York's chief law enforcement officer, Eliot Spitzer has taken on the titans of Wall Street to get a fair deal for Main Street. His far-reaching investigations have uncovered fraudulent practices in some of the nation's biggest companies and helped restore transparency and honesty to industries that provide important products and services to regular Americans-mutual funds, prescription drugs, insurance. David Brancaccio goes inside the mind, motivations and investigations of one of the nation's most feared and respected attorneys general, the man they call "the sheriff of Wall Street." Richard Dawkins is one of the most controversial thinkers in the world today. His book THE SELFISH GENE describes in stunning detail a world where the mission for all life is nothing more than to replicate itself. Just as the long-simmering battle over how evolution is taught in America's schools is heating up again, Dawkins' most recent book, THE ANCESTOR'S TALE, sheds light on the most compelling aspects of evolutionary history and theory. Bill Moyers gets perspective from Dawkins, a prominent zoologist, on critical thinking and on the backlash against the very notion of evolution. "Among things that science does know, evolution is about as certain as anything," he says. "And it's accepted by responsible educated churchmen, as well as scientists."

What's wrong with Wal-Mart? It's still the world's biggest company -- at this time of year it may take in $1 billion a day, which is more than the entire nation of Sweden produces. But suddenly the Beast of Bentonville is looking vulnerable. Sales growth last month was pathetic. Goldman Sachs has downgraded the stock. And now across America people are asking whether this is a bump in the road, or is the whole business, social, and cultural phenomenon of Wal-Mart cooling down? Marshall Cohen is retailing's trendmeister, senior analyst at NPD Group. Watts Wacker is a futurist and author of The 500 Year Delta. When a certain popular bakery company opens a new store, voracious fans often camp out overnight just to be first in line to get one of these gooey, hot, glazed treats. The company sells so many donuts in just a week that if you lined them up, the sugary trail would stretch all the way from New York to Los Angeles! And within two years after going public, Krispy Kreme's stock more than tripled. But now? The company's boss is at the top of Herb Greenberg's list for the worst CEO of the year. Herb is a Wall Street Week with FORTUNE contributor and CBS Marketwatch columnist and he joins us with his picks for the best and worst CEO's.

It's that time of year -- New Year's resolutions that will be broken by February, predictions that will be forgotten by spring, and those promises to get to the gym, well, never mind. But it's also time to reassess your portfolio, and that's just what contributor and money manager Michael Farr has been doing. He joins us with the stocks he's buying for the New Year. Regardless of whether your performance is record-setting, you might think you have much to be grateful for as an investor this year. Top executives at many of the scandal companies have been indicted, and some are in prison. The Sarbanes-Oxley law imposes tough requirements for better financial reporting and corporate governance for jail time with managers who don't comply. New York Attorney General Eliot Spitzer has forced the mutual fund industry and Wall Street analysts to clean up their acts. It all sounds so encouraging, but in truth, you're not nearly as safe as you may think. What are the new ways you're being ripped off? Which slimy practices still haven't been exposed? And what can you do to protect yourself?
